

Background

Under the General Data Protection Regulation, a business must disclose at the earliest stage, a privacy notice, detailing how data is processed, controlled and distributed. Businesses must retain records of how consent was gained and evidence the consent. Red text is for editing and tailoring to your business. One of the biggest challenges is to encourage people to read privacy information. People are often unwilling to engage with detailed explanations, particularly where they are embedded in lengthy terms and conditions. This does not mean that privacy notices are merely a formality; it means that they have to be written and presented effectively.

Information should:

- use clear, straightforward language;
- adopt a simple style that your audience will find easy to understand;
- not assume that everybody has the same level of understanding as you;
- avoid confusing terminology or legalistic language;
- draw on research about features of effective privacy notices when developing your own;
- align to your house style. Using expertise, for example in-house copywriters can help it fit with the style and approach your customers expect;
- align with your organisation's values and principles. Doing so means that people will be more inclined to read privacy notices, understand them and trust your handling of their information;
- be truthful. Don't offer people choices that are counter-intuitive or misleading;
- follow any specific sectoral rules as well as complying with data protection law, for example in advertising or financial services sectors; and
- ensure your privacy notices are consistent across multiple platforms and enable rapid updates to them all when needed. Privacy notices can be managed using content management systems (CMS)
